Objectives	This course aims to enhance students’ knowledge of social policy in Asia. It is designed primarily as a means to enhance a comparative understanding of social policy in Asia, the emerging and new challenges encountered within and across specific national contexts, and the problems related to policy-making and implementation. A variety of emerging social policy issues in Asia will be covered, with special attention to social policy associated with crime and drug prevention, such as social security and welfare measures, housing problems, aging population, labor conditions, environmental problems, gender inequality, and education inequality, etc.
Intended Learning Outcomes	Upon completion of the subject, students are able to: a. Be equipped with basic competence and knowledge of how social policy impacts on social development in Asian context; b. Develop independent critical thinking in assessing the connection between responsible social policy and development options in Asian countries; c. Identify critical ethical dilemmas and criteria for policy making in Asia

	d. Develop a cross-cultural and cross-national perspective to address social problems and to devise social policy options for Asian societies. e. A higher level of critical thinking, creativity, and commitment to continual learning in social policy and social development thinking, displaying insights and making appropriate judgment, and clarifying complex policy and development issues. Their seminar presentation and participation will give them an additional opportunity to display their learning outcomes as described above. However, this will further allow them to make evident their competence as a team player and their performance in an interactive group setting. The short seminar paper will also enable students to show off their ability and capability in presenting their ideas in a succinct form, requiring them to be creative, concise, logical and professional in communicating and organizing their ideas and knowledge as well as making good judgments in selecting the best way for delivering what they have learnt. The grade is calculated according to the percentage assigned. The completion and submission of all component assignments are required for passing the subject; and student must pass the specific component(s) (standard of passing) if he/she is to pass the subject
